Sunesta
East End Awning

HERE'S TO A SQUINT-FREE SUMMER!

Here's to a glorious summer under the shade of a Sunesta awning from East End Awning. It's going to be hot. The sun is going to be strong. Even with sunscreen and sunglasses you'll need extra protection.

Starting our 8th season at East End Awning, we offer a large selection of strong, water-repellent awnings available in over 200 beautiful colors and patterns. Sunesta awnings have no ugly confining braces or upright poles and they retract easily either manually or with the push of a button with an optional motor.

They'll shield you from the brutal sun, provide soothing, cooling shade and beautify your home, all at the same time. (And maybe prevent a few wrinkles, too.)

Call now so we can order and install your awnings before things get really hot! (Installation is free).

The Down Factory Store

Thanks to our retail and "online" customers we are one of the largest resources for goose down comforters, pillows and featherbeds. Consumers that compare our quality and prices to those of department stores, discounters, catalogs and other web sites find that we are indeed unbeatable - and we guarantee that! Know the facts of down before you buy.

FACT: Down comes from the chest of the bird to keep it insulated from the weather. Feathers (those things with quills) come from the back of the bird to keep it dry. Down can cost as much as $10.00 an ounce, feathers 10¢ an ounce. Over 90% of down manufacturers find it to their advantage to add over 30% feathers to their down. It's like buying three pounds of ground sirloin and getting two pounds of meat and one pound of fat. You have paid for meat and got fat, it's the same with their down, they both do it because it's legal. We do not contaminate our down by adding feathers to it.

Guaranteed LOWEST Down Prices in THE COUNTRY

(CATALOGS, CHAINS, DISCOUNTERS WE BEAT THEM ALL)

PHONE ORDER DEPARTMENT
1(888) 414 - DOWN

"We go the distance for you."

KNOW THE FACTS BEFORE YOU BUY IT

FACT: Fill power, this is the amount the cubic inches filled by one ounce of down. Higher fill power means a higher quality down. You will find that as the quality of the down increases, so does the comfort & life of the item.

FACT: We use only high thread count, baffle box construction, 100% cotton covers on our down comforters & pillows. Down insulates by trapping air and holding in your body temperature, keeping you comfortable through the night. Low quality comforters are usually heavier because it takes more of an inferior down to fill a comforter. Inferior down becomes clumpy and it can't breath, resulting in your becoming over heated and uncomfortable. Our high quality down gives you the warmth and comfort without the weight.

FACT: In all likelihood you will have your comforter longer than the car you are now driving.

In Search Of Patriots

Away From The Hamptons, On Vacation, Looking For Super Bowl Sunday

By Dan Rattiner

In early January, Cathie and I decided to get away from the winter's chill by going to the Caribbean for an eight-day vacation. The dates we chose, because they fit into our busy schedules, were Friday, February first through Saturday, February ninth. We wanted peace and quiet, sun and sea. We would go to Andros, a quiet Bahamian "out" Island, a place with maybe just a few hundred people. We'd do some swimming, some snorkling, some sailing.

Of course, I would watch the Super Bowl, which was on Sunday, February third. I had called the Good Fish Club, where we would be staying, and determined that they had a TV in the bar and if I wanted to watch the Super Bowl, that would be no problem. I imagined a bunch of us, some Americans, some Bahamians, sitting around, drinking rum, cheering for the Patriots or the Rams, making bets, getting drunk. Cat, of course, had tolerated Super Bowl at home before. She would tolerate it again. I checked with her, too. It was fine. Just that one day of the year. She'd get through it.

We left early in the morning from LaGuardia Airport, spending two hours standing on line to go through all the security. I had a toenail clipper, which, with my permission, the security people disabled. One of them wiggled the nail file part of it back and forth until it broke off. The nail file part was a weapon. But I wasn't going to toenail clip anybody to do my bidding.

At the airport in Nassau, we changed planes for the trip to Andros. This took place in a small, remote corner of the old airport, where a small Western Air counter had been set up next to the bathrooms. No security check here. Just leave your bags behind the counter. We'll call you when it's time to come back. Maybe the plane is early, maybe it's late. You're on island time now.

The flight to Andros was only twenty minutes and at the end our tiny plane — we were the only passengers — swooped low over the swamps, wetlands, palm trees and lagoons of what is surely, per square mile, the least inhabited island in the Caribbean. We bumped down the dirt airstrip and came to a stop alongside the only other plane there, a brand new four propeller transport plane that had big white letters on the side reading US NAVY. It had come in just before us, the back was open and about eighty sailors were already marching out double time. They were brought to attention. As for us, our German-speaking pilot wrestled open the door and we climbed down to the tarmac.

Waiting for us was John the taxi driver. "Big Navy base here. Secret," he said, indicating the sailors.

Good Fish Club was a twenty-minute drive down a potholed two-lane road. The airport was in the middle of nowhere. The 16 unit fishing lodge, for that is what it was, was in the middle of nowhere. The road connected them. Down the road was another lodge. That was it.

A friendly staff greeted us at the front office. We were led to our room, which was a small air-conditioned cottage festooned with flowers. The bed linen was turned down. There were welcoming drinks on our little breakfast table. Cat loved it.

We were given a tour of the grounds. Every cottage overlooked the lagoon. There was a rec room with a pool table, a library, a dive center, a swimming pool, a dining room. We passed the bar, sitting on a dock directly over the water. Inside, two men were at a table

South O' the Highway (and North, too)

Oh to be 21 and the heiress to a hotel chain. Southampton's Paris Hilton celebrated the big two one with a pajama party at Lotus on Thursday, followed the next day by a party at Studio 54. On Saturday, there's a party for her in Las Vegas at Las Palmas and on the same night one at the GQ Lounge In LA. We intend to lift a glass of the bubbly to her too. But at 21.

Tina Brown has been rumored to be talking to Walter Isaacson about holding an interview show on CNN. Many media deals go down in the Hamptons and both of them have houses out here.

East Hampton's Puffy Combs is simply amazing. He was the star of the recent Fashion Week where his new Sean John collection was premiered. His current collection is flying off the shelves. Last week he rang the bell to open the New York Stock Exchange for the day. And he is just can't do anything wrong. Almost wants to make you break into song. A Hip Hop song.

Mort Zuckerman of East Hampton, the New York Daily News and the Artist-Writers Softball Game, hosted a fund raiser for Montana senator Max Baucus at his Fifth Avenue apartment the other day. Baucus is a longtime friend of Zuckermans. Attending were, among others, Bill Rudin, Steven Rattner, Bernard Schwartz, Bob Wright, Charles Schumer, Hillary Clinton, Jon Corzine and Paul Charron.

Pretty girls just want to take their clothes off when in front of the lens of Montauk photographer Peter Beard. It happened again at Lotus in New York the other night where Beard was doing a lingerie shoot from which the best pictures would be selected for a feature of photos in an upcoming show. About 200 girls showed up, many of them stripping naked, others throwing their underwear off the club's second floor patio, others kissing each other and generally fighting about who would get shot first. Shoot them all, is what we say.

Fashion Week in N.Y. holds special interest to us, for we host in our Hamptons some of the most famous designers in the world. And if it's anything that the Hampton people know how to do is dress. Calvin Klein, Donna Karan,Tommy Hilfiger, Ralph Lauren, Carolina Herrera and Diane von Furstenberg all showed and it was a huge success. Thanks for the quote, Liz Smith. A lady who shows she knows how to dress when she's out here.

Had enough fashion news? Just one more thing....On February 7, more fashion royalty showed up at the party for the New York Post clothes supplement . Some of our local gals were Karen Duffy, Caroline Herrera and the Southamptonites...Nicky and Paris Hilton.

There is rest for the weary it seems, but it will be very difficult for these two gentlemen to be replaced.

playing dominoes. And there was the TV, as promised, at the back of the bar. It wasn't on. But there it was. We went back to our room to rest up after our long journey. Dinner would be in one hour.

We seemed to be the only guests at the club at that particular time. One group, some investment bankers from Salt Lake City, had just left, we were told. Another, some executives from Switzerland, would arrive on Monday. The point of the place was fly fishing. Indeed, there were so many fish in the lagoon you could often see them and hear them jumping out of the water. Obviously, this was a world-class fishing destination and surely, after we got settled, a guide would take us out.

Cathie was delighted we had the whole place to ourselves. She had already begun rearranging the furniture in our cottage. I, on the other hand, wondered if any of the staff, which was almost entirely Bahamian, would have any interest in the Super Bowl. But then I remembered how the commentators always said there were a billion people around the world watching the event.

Late the next morning, Saturday, I wandered over to the bar to check on the TV. What channels did they get? How was the reception? The reception was fine, the bartender told me. And they got five hundred channels. I could see the converter box. And I already had seen the satellite dish on the roof of the office.

Cathie and I swam in the pool, read books in the library, slept on chaise lounges, went for walks holding hands and ate a spectacular lunch prepared by Tyrone, the culinary school-trained chef. As we were the only guests, he was actually our private chef. What would we like? How did we want it prepared?

I asked just about everybody there if they had any interest in the Super Bowl. All had heard of it. But nobody seemed excited about it. There were tarpon out there. There were bonefish out there that even at seven pounds, fought like hell. Around four o'clock, having not seen the TV on at all, I went down to the bar to check it out further. Steel band music was blaring from the stereo. Half a dozen people were there, drinking, talking and playing cards or dominoes. I asked the bartender if he would turn the TV on.

"Oh," he said, "it's off now. The TV card ran out."

"What's a TV card?"

"It goes in the slot there in the box. It's like a credit card. You give the TV people some money. They enter the money in the card. Like a phone card."

"I get it," I said.

"James will have to take it over to Nassau," he said, referring to the general manager.

Let's see. It was Saturday afternoon. If my recollection at the airport was correct, there were two flights a day between Nassau and Andros during the week. And only one flight, in the afternoon, on Sunday.

The bartender saw immediately what I was thinking.

"I'll tell James," he said.

I went with him to the office where I had checked in. A sign on the door said OPEN 9 TO 5 MONDAY TO SATURDAY. It was 4:15 Saturday. It was closed.

We walked back to the bar. "Which team are you rooting for?" the bartender asked.

"The Patriots," I said.

"There's another club just down the beach. Arnold Lee's. He has a TV. You could watch it there."

What were the chances of his running out of his TV card? I thought. Very low. "Shall we call him?" I asked.

"You just go over there," the bartender said.

"I think I will," I said. Cat was on the front lawn of the lodge, sitting at a table, painting a watercolor on a pad. I told her I would be gone for an hour.

NEW YORK'S MOST CELEBRATED SYNAGOGUE

Green Flash

First Of Two Green Flashes Is Seen Over The Ocean Of Sagaponack

By Dan Rattiner

I wrote an article a few weeks ago extolling the virtues of watching the sun set over the ocean in the Hamptons. In response, several people wrote me that the sun doesn't set over the ocean in the Hamptons. The way our shoreline is angled, and it goes straight for sixty miles, the entire length of the Hamptons is at the wrong angle for sunsets. We get sunrises over the ocean. But who watches sunrises? You have to get up so early. And for some reason, the colors of the sunrise don't last very long. As for sunsets, the sun sets over the back of the dunes, over the mainland. Not much to see there unless you are up very high.

These letter writers are wrong. The sun sets over the ocean for three whole months in the Hamptons: November, December and January. It's a complicated bit of solar system geometry, involving the earth spinning on an axis that is not straight up and down, our oval journey around the sun and how far up the planet we are toward the North Pole, but the result is that beginning the first week in November, you can go down to the beach and watch the sun set into the sea. It sets further out into the sea each day until December 21, when it reaches what is known as the winter solstice, and then it sets further in each day until the last week in January when, finally, the sun moves over to set on the beach and then back behind the dunes for the remaining nine months of the year.

That these three months might not be the favorite three beach months for these letter writers is understandable. You can't sit outside for most of these days, given the cold and blustery weather, but there are days you can, and for the rest, there are indoor places on the brink of the ocean where you can go at that time of year — Gurney's Inn comes to mind — and lift a drink to what you see.

I have, on two occasions this winter, seen not only the sunset but the Green Flash at sunset. I've lived here for forty-six years. This is the first time I have ever seen the Green Flash on the eastern end of Long Island over the ocean. And now I have seen it twice.

The drink in your hand has nothing to do with... the Green Flash. It just has to do with a tilted axis, orbit, latitude and (I guess) global warming.

I consider this quite extraordinary. Conditions have to be absolutely right, the main one being you need to have the full glare of the sun on you as it sets, so you can't be looking at it through glass. You have to be outdoors. And this winter we HAVE had days you could be outdoors. We've had amazingly warm weather for this time of year, and I have had many opportunities, right on the beach, sitting there on the sand, or standing there, often with drink in hand, to watch the sun go down. And no, the drink in hand has nothing to do with your ability to see the Green Flash. It just has to do with a tilted axis, orbit, latitude and (I guess) global warming.

The Green Flash is well-known on the west coast, particularly on the western coast of all the islands in Hawaii. I lived there some years ago for four months and I saw the Green Flash many times and sort of got to know it. I've been disappointed to be unable to find it back home. Until now.

The first one I saw was on December 2 at Indian Wells Beach in Amagansett. It was 4:30 in the afternoon, the temperature that day had risen to a record shattering 62 degrees, and was still around 55. There were many people on the beach, some surf fishing, some surfing, some standing around or sitting in lawn chairs they had gone to the garage to get back out.

It had been a cloudless day, and also a windless one. Often, particularly in the wintertime, the wind springs up late in the day. So even on days when the temperature is relatively high at that time of year, it is difficult to go outside at the beach. The wind whistles down the strand along its prevailing west to east course, as if it were racing down a sixty mile long highway.

On this day, however, at 4:30 pm., no wind. I was out. Many other people were out. If ever we were going to have a Green Flash, I thought, this was the time.

The sun came closer and closer to the line of the horizon. Then, for a moment, it touched, a red ball balanced on a blue canvas. Then it began to sink, creating that familiar illusion, into the sea. One expects to hear hissing noises and see steam rising from the point where the sun is sinking. But we don't and it isn't.

On certain days, the sun begins to glow a deep purple on the horizon. Above the sunset, it has been as bright as a flashbulb. You cannot look at it. Then it softens, turns yellow, then orange then red. The perfect sphere of it is quite definable. You can look at it directly then, and you can study it curiously. These are not the kind of sunsets that will result in a Green Flash.

The sunset you need, and which we had that day, is one that stays bright until the very end. In addition to a naturally clear sky, you also have to have a horizon free of haze and, how shall I put this, a lack of smoky, colorful greenhouse gasses.

It was hard to look at the sun as it touched down on the Atlantic Ocean on December 2. It hurt your eyes. Then it slowly sank down and when three quarters of it was gone, people began to discuss the prospect. The sun was still bright but you could look at it. Conditions were perfect.

From three quarters down to all the way down is a matter of no more than a minute. You can almost count it down. It was staying bright. Stare at it, stare at it.

"Don't look away, keep your eyes glued to it, hold your head still."

And then in a flash, a Green Flash, the sun was gone. The image lingered. This is the same thing that happens when you look directly at a flashbulb. There on the horizon, where the sun had been, was a tiny patch of green. People began to cheer. If you kept your head steady, it lasted four or five seconds. Then it was gone.

"Did you see it? Did you see it?"

Some did. Some didn't. There is magic about it. You have to hold your head very still and keep your

On the way over to Arnold Lee's, I got to thinking about the Navy Base. Navy Base means the Armed Forces Television Network. Navy Base means hundreds of rabid football fans. Navy Base means Super Bowl Sunday.

Arnold Lee's Club was about a twenty-minute walk from Good Fish Club through the jungle along the beach. As I approached, I could hear the TV droning away in the bar, but when I went into the bar, there was nobody there. The card, I saw, was sticking into the converter box. I thought briefly about turning the TV off. This was wasteful. And the TV card could run out. But I resisted the urge. It was Lee's TV.

I watched it for awhile. There was a preview on of an upcoming movie starring Julia Roberts and Russell Crowe. Looked really good. A half an hour later there came on a boxing match between Bernard Hopkins and somebody I never heard of. I was watching HBO. The quality of the picture was excellent. The quality of the Super Bowl was going to be excellent.

Arnold Lee showed up just before round 3. There hadn't been anyone at his club either in several days, he said. But a group was coming in next week who had booked the whole place. Lee told me fishing stories. He reached under the bar and told me that, because I was the first person in the bar in two days, the drinks were on him. In fact, he was going to break out a special Cuban rum. He had just gotten back from Cuba. He loved Cuba. We both had a drink.

"What channel is your Super Bowl on?" he asked.

"I don't know."

"What time is it on?"

"I don't know that either. I thought there would be some newspapers down here. One o'clock. Maybe three o'clock."

Arnold Lee grew up on Andros. He was and is considered the best fishing guide on the island. He has eleven children, three of whom work with him. Recently, he had bought oceanfront property, then split it in two and built his club on one half of it. The other half remained vacant, but now he had become a partner in the Good Fish Club down the way.

"I'm a minority owner," he said.

By this time, we had had three drinks each. We went over to the TV, Lee picked up the remote and began to roam around the schedule of 500 channels on the screen looking for the Super Bowl.

"Go to one o'clock tomorrow afternoon," I said. "Why does it keep saying the time is two-fifteen?"

"That's what time it is in Oregon," Lee said. "The cable dish people come from Oregon. You sure you don't know what channel it's on?"

"Try CBS," I said, "Or Fox."

"We don't get CBS or Fox," he said. "But I think

Regina Maris

Battle For Tall Ship, Fought For Seven Years In Greenport, Ends

By Dan Rattiner

For most of the 1990s, a three-masted tall ship, known as the Regina Maris, stood proudly at the pier at the end of Main Street in Greenport. You saw her if you came to the North Fork on the ferry from Shelter Island. You saw her masts, towering over Greenport Village as you came down Main Street toward the pier at the end.

The Regina Maris aroused passions in Greenport and on the rest of the East End during those years. More romantic types saw her as a symbol of the town, as a reminder of days gone by when Greenport was a bustling seaport and whaling village during the nineteenth and early twentieth centuries. More practical types saw her as a floating wreck, a great ship that had seen better days but now was in need of expensive and almost impossible renovations, totally beyond the limited resources of the village, or at least beyond what might be allocated to build a symbol for the village when there were so many other pressing needs for funds for this and that.

The Regina Maris, originally christened the Regina, was built in 1908 in Denmark as a fast before-the-wind freight hauler. She hauled lumber and whale oil, textiles and hard goods. In 1964, the ship was converted into a private luxury yacht by two Norwegian brothers. She served her new owners by retracing a historic voyage, originally made by Captain James Cook from England to Australia, in 1970. A book was written about this voyage. Then, in 1976, when all the tall ships in the world descended on Manhattan for the great parade up the Hudson to celebrate this country's bicentennial, the Regina Maris was invited to attend. As one of the last three remaining barkentines known to exist, she was a small, treasured jewel in that parade, 74-feet long with a crew of four, her ten-foot bowsprit supporting a carved figurehead in the shape of a goddess, her sails rising almost ten stories above the water line, her decks and railings newly restored. After the tall ship parade, the Regina Maris was sold to a group of whale biologists, who used her as a research vessel. They sold her again in 1986, this time to a down-at-the-heel yachtsman.

The Regina Maris came to Greenport by accident. Owned by another yachtsman with a penchant for the bottle and with few financial resources, she was tied up one day in June of 1991 so her owner could spend the summer in that town. In the fall, there was a berthing bill to pay. No money was forthcoming. And so the ship was seized and the owner removed, but it was soon determined that the cost of any restoration of the ship would exceed its value. She couldn't pay the bill.

A standoff ensued, and at one point, the evicted yachtsman did something outrageous. He came aboard the ship one night with a powersaw, cut out all the hardware, portholes and windows, and made off with them. He was now done with the ship, which was in an even sorrier state.

She sat at the dock as a tourist attraction now, awaiting a restoration that, in the end, never came.

Under the circumstances, a group of concerned citizens in Greenport could not be blamed for forming a non-profit restoration group, buying the Regina Maris for $1 and commencing a restoration effort, with volunteers, fundraisers, paint and spar varnish. Some things, such as the masts and sails, were in fine shape. Some things, such as the hull, were in bad shape. Indeed, the hull was leaking badly and pumps had to be kept going full time to keep it afloat. Nevertheless, you could pay a few dollars on a summer day and go aboard, touring the wheelhouse and staterooms, the hold and the galley. She sat at the dock as a tourist attraction now, awaiting a restoration that, in the end, never came.

In 1994, a newly-elected and vigorous Mayor, Dave Kapell — he remains Mayor today — over many objections announced that the Regina Maris would have to go. Greenport had approved a dockside park along almost the entire length of Front Street. The land would be cleared and landscaped, public docks and walkways would be built and, since he and his staff had determined to their satisfaction that the Regina Maris was too expensive a restoration project to be the centerpiece of this dockside park, she should either be given away or sunk offshore. Instead, the dockside park would have as its centerpiece a beautiful merry-go-round, one that had been given to them by a former aerospace corporation in Riverhead, Grumman, that was undergoing a merger and departing the area, and which was seeking a good home for its merry-go-round. The merry-go-round was seventy years old. She had been used in Riverhead as part of a playground for the children of the employees at company picnics. Greenport could have her for the cost of hauling her away. Greenport took her.

It was at this point that Dan's Papers stepped in. I am an unabashed romantic. I loved the old boat. And I could not see how a merry-go-round in the center of a business district in an old port town could lead that town out of its economic doldrums. And so, I did what I did at that time, which was to bang the drum for the restoration group, write stories about the hard heartedness of the new Mayor — who took it like a man — and tried to convince everybody that only a three-masted tall ship, or better yet one with four masts or even five, could hope to be the salvation of the economic future of the town. My argument went that if Greenport, by chance, had been the site of a major revolutionary war battle, one would not have as its centerpiece a collection of some local guy's old antique phonographs.

During the course of this struggle, a hurricane came, the Regina Maris was deliberately sunk, then re-floated after surviving it and then, to prevent further damage to the hull, was wrapped in heavy plastic with huge nylon ropes. Among other things, the leaks in the hull were worsening.

The battle between the Mayor and the restoration group was held fairly and in good taste, I thought. In the end, however, little money was raised, and a report of a historical episode involving the Regina Maris during World War II resulted in the ship being taken over by the City of Glen Cove and moved away. Glen Cove had far more resources than Greenport and would restore her and make her the centerpiece of THEIR new harbor front revival. The ship would be saved. Though it would be Greenport's loss, you couldn't argue with that.

What Tom Suozzi, the Mayor of Glen Cove, was intrigued about was a report in Dan's Papers that, in 1942, during World War II, the Regina Maris had secretly and repeatedly carried Jews to safety across the Bering Straight between Denmark, occupied by the Nazis, and Norway.

Mayor Suozzi called me about this story. I told him what I knew. I had been called by a woman who had told me this, who said it had been told to her by her grandmother. I gave him this woman's name from my reporter's notes. I told him no, I could not confirm this.

An old three-masted Barkentine in distress is one thing, an old icon of the World War II underground in distress was quite another. Suozzi paid Mayor Kapell of Greenport one dollar, and on a sunny day in the fall of 1998 sent some tugboats to Greenport to haul away the Regina Maris. There were tears in the eyes of some people as she left. But there was also joy in the hearts of these people knowing that the Regina Maris would be saved.

Unfortunately, three bad things happened in Glen Cove that resulted in the plans for the Regina Maris to go awry. For one, the city historian, assigned to find out the truth about the Regina Maris, came back with the unfortunate news that the name of the ship, as reported by the woman's grandmother, was the Stella Maris. Memories fade. No one knows where the Stella Maris is today, but the Regina Maris she was not.

Secondly, the estimated cost of the restoration of the old Regina Maris came in at around $4 million, and though fundraising efforts were attempted, Glen Cove was having no greater success with her than Greenport did. Thirdly, last autumn, the people of Glen Cove woke up one morning to find that the Regina Maris had sunk. The old hull had just given way. And she was down in eight feet of water, with the three great masts sticking up, towering now just ninety-two feet over the town instead of the regular one hundred.

Last week, the new Mayor of Glen Cove, Mary Ann Holzkamp — Mayor Suozzi has been elected Nassau County Executive — began a project to save as much of the Regina Maris as possible. The three masts are being unstepped and re-stepped on the city's esplanade as sculptures along the walkway, planted in concrete piers. Her ship's wheel is being removed — the old owner with the power saw had missed out on that — and will be displayed along with some of the decking of the Planet Of The Dogs

My New Movie Script — Please Don't Fight With One Another For The Rights

By Dan Rattiner

Here's my latest idea for a movie. It's called Planet of the Dogs. The concept for this movie is that, five million years ago, the evolution of dogs and humans went in opposite directions. The dogs got human traits and the humans got dog traits. So it is the humans, therefore, who chase tennis balls into the ocean and scratch for fleas. It is the dogs who wear wristwatches and play video games.

I know that in some ways, this is like the Planet of the Apes. But really, it is very different. The people jump up and down and are happy to see the dogs whenever they come home. The dogs put muzzles on the humans, before bathing and grooming them, so they won't get bit. And they give out prizes at the Westminster Human Show.

Furthermore, unlike in Planet of the Apes, the humans really can't understand what the dogs are saying. The dogs say woof, woof, woof and that's what it sounds like to the humans. The movie viewer gets to know what they are saying because there are subtitles. After all it is, from a certain perspective, a foreign film.

There are other ways in which Planet of the Dogs is not like Planet of the Apes. There is no interspecies love affair, for example — not that there is one in Planet of the Apes, but there is almost one and there is a very attractive female ape. There's no way this goes on in Planet of the Dogs.

Another difference is that there is no group of humans leading a revolt as there is in Planet of the Apes. Oh, I imagine that in Planet of the Dogs there is a half-hearted attempt. I mean, the humans do meet.

"They make us sleep in these damn beds every night," one disgruntled human says. "The dogs get to sleep ANYWHERE."

"Did you see Fido sleeping on his back, wedged in against the front door? Disgusting."

"We should have the right to sleep anywhere."

"Here comes Fidel. He's been spying on the dogs. Maybe he has some news. Fidel, why do you have that old sneaker in your mouth?"

"Mmmmnf. Grbble. Grab my shoe. Betcha can't grab my shoe."

"I can grab Fidel's shoe."

"Shut up."

Maybe there is a love scene. A human, wiggling the vestige of his tail and licking a dog all over. Disgusting.

There's one scene in the movie where two groups of humans approach one another in a field and alternately curse at one another and sniff each other's butts. A couple of them go off and pee on trees in the corners of the field.

I don't know if I've got enough here to make a movie out of. I am thinking about getting another group of humans into the situation who act like cats. They slink around, clean themselves with their tongues, sleep a lot. Sort of like that Broadway show. Maybe not.

I think there might be REAL cats who spend a lot of their time fighting with one another because there are some of them who believe one thing about their creator and there are some of them who believe another thing about their creator. There's one group of cats who won't eat pork. Finicky.

In the end, there are dog-like humans who are running along the beach chasing tennis balls, the males marking the driftwood when they come upon this forty-foot broken statue of a fire hydrant.

Anybody want to option the script?

Maybe there is a love scene. A human, wiggling the vestige of his tail and licking a dog all over. Disgusting.

Broadway hit The Producers two mega-stars Matthew Broderick and Nathan Lane will be having their last performance on March 17. Watermill's local boy Mel Brooks is the Producer and we're sure that he will be overseeing the actors up for part.

It seems that Martha Stewart's pre-bankruptcy contract with the failing Kmart chain may not hold up as well as her line of terry cloth towels and a lot more of her fine household items do. It could amount to 13 million she will be owed. We're betting on you, Martha. It's a good thing that didn't plant any bushes near you.

Hip-hop and rappers are part of our society. If you have been around for the last 20 years you know that. Russell Simmons is doing his best to help people see the importance of this side of the entertainment field and is doing in our opinion a great job of it. His recent HBO Def Poetry Jam special featured street verses about September 11 and was extremely powerful and moving.

Russell Simmons shared his thoughts on the key to success with Donald Trump and USA Networks founder Kay Koplowitz at the Learning Annex. This sold out audience shelled out $200 a head to learn the secrets. It seems to us if they are charging 200 a pop, they sure do know how to make money.

ship and her beautiful carved figurehead in an exhibit nearby. The rest of the ship will, unfortunately, be lost.

"It seemed like a good idea to restore it," the new mayor said. "But it just wasn't feasible."

And so ends the saga of the Regina Maris. What remains of her, here on the East End anyway, are some t-shirts that have side view drawings of her, along with the word GREENPORT. Also, a dockside park with a circular glass building, inside which a merry-go-round goes round and round. Greenport shows some new signs of life. But we are in a recession. And it's just a little blip on the radar so far.

I couldn't help making a little joke about the merry-go-round the other day. I hope you'll forgive me. I was getting off the ferry from Shelter Island, taking my two teenagers up to Boston where they attend college, and as we came off, I suggested we stop at the merry-go-round. The calliope was hooting, the horses were bucking, the colored lights were twinkling.

"We could get tickets," I said. "There's a two week wait, but sometimes they have a cancellation."

The boys, eighteen and nineteen and both over six feet, looked at me and did not laugh. Then they mumbled that no, we ought to just keep on going up to Orient to take the big ferry across Long Island Sound to New England.

Oh well.

Gabreski

Former WWII Ace For Whom Westhampton Airport Is Named Passes Away

By David Rattiner

Something that I think about is what it must have been like during WWII. These must have been some very scary times. Lately, the Air Force has been on my mind and especially the fact that fighter pilots or fighter "jocks" at that time were flying around in hunks of metal to protect our country. I've watched Tom Cruise fly an F-14, I have been fascinated by airplanes, everything from the Stealth Bomber to the F-16, all that technology that makes it possible to destroy things, while traveling at twice the speed of sound.

Much of this technology has its roots in WWII. It was during this time that the value of the military fighter pilot was recognized and praised. And on January 31, 2002, a very famous WWII and Korean War ace passed away here on Long Island. His name was Francis S. Gabreski and his life is straight out of a war movie.

"Gabby" was born on January 28, 1919 in Oil City, Pennsylvania. When he graduated from high school he was determined to make his parents proud, so he headed to Notre Dame, where he planned on studying to be a doctor. Gabby was never really interested in airplanes until he went to college, where he realized it would be a fun way to travel from Oil City to South Bend.

While at college, Gabby went to hear some recruitment officers speak about the military. At the time, the war was raging in Europe and the Nazis had invaded Poland. Gabby signed up for the Army Air Corps and began his adventures in the skies.

During flight training in East St. Louis, Gabby was tested in every aspect of mind and body that the army could figure out to test. The flight trainers were seeking young men who had the right stuff to fly an airplane coolly and confidently. Gabby struggled through flight school and nearly didn't make the cut. The fighter pilot must maintain rigorous and intense focus and daily, Gabby would dodge death in his Stearman PT-17 biplane. He would try to maintain specific altitudes and perform maneuvers while also "pushing the envelope" of his aircraft. And there is no end to a fighter jock's training.

The fight was intense, the air filled with roaring engines and smoke, shells whizzed through the sky, airplanes passed one another firing their machine guns...

In March of 1941, Gabreski sailed for Hawaii aboard the SS Washington. There wasn't a more beautiful place in the world to be a fighter pilot. Gabby's excitement overwhelmed him when he saw the beautiful Pacific beaches and the gorgeous weather at Wheeler Field, Oahu. He was assigned to the 45th Fighter Squadron of the 15th Fighter Group. Little did he know the adventures that stood before him.

On December 7, 1941, the day that will live in infamy, in the middle of his morning routine, Gabby heard machine gun fire outside his quarters as Japanese Zeros passed overhead, destroying whatever they could. Gabby ran outside amidst sirens, explosions and men screaming and yelling as the surprise attack intensified. Fighters were scrambled and Gabby jumped into his P-40, with its 1000 hp engine, his pulse racing. As they made their way into the sky, the P-40s searched for Japanese Zeros, but they were long gone. The attack was so swift that Gabby could see only what was left of the ships below.

Having survived Pearl Harbor, Gabby wanted to get out and fight. He was promoted to captain and headed to England to join the 315th Squadron in early January of 1943. Flying the new Spitfires, which were lighter, faster and more maneuverable than the P-40's, Gabby began to train his squadron. On

February 27, 1943, he rejoined the U.S. Eighth Air Force, assigned to Hub Zemke's 56th Fighter Group, which was stationed at Kings Cliffe airfield, flying P-47 Thunderbolts. It wasn't long before the dog fighting began and Gabby scored his first victory on August 24, 1943.

A few months later, on December 11, 1943, Gabby was flying an escort mission for bombers in a raid on Emden. While flying at 20,000 feet Gabby found himself in the middle of a dogfight, his squadron under attack by German Bf-110's. The fight was intense, the air filled with roaring engines and smoke, shells whizzed through the sky, airplanes passed one another firing their machine guns and the Thunderbolts made evasive maneuvers. After shooting down a German fighter, Gabby found himself low on fuel and separated from his squadron. He headed west to England, but he was attacked by a German Bf-110. Flying into a dive, with no fuel, Gabby found some clouds, lost his pursuer and barely made it back to base.

On D-Day, June 6, 1944, Gabby earned the recognition as America's leading ace. Having shot down twenty-eight German planes in his career, he flew into the D-day battle and was hit. He crash landed and headed for the woods, while being chased by the Germans. After five days of hiding, he was captured and sent to Stalag Luft I, a prisoner of war camp. Nine months later, in March 1945, the Russians arrived and Gabby was freed. But Gabby had not yet finished leaving his mark on the world.

After a successful campaign in Korea, where he shot down seven enemy planes, Gabby retired from the Air Force in 1967 and moved to Dix Hills, Long Island. He was President of the Long Island Railroad from 1978 to 1981 and he later worked in customer relations for the Grumman Aerospace Corporation. He was an honest and blunt speaker and he raised six daughters and three sons, who gave him eighteen grandchildren. In 1991, the Westhampton Airport was renamed the Gabreski Airport to honor a man who had flown more fighter missions than any other pilot in history.

War is undoubtedly scary, but Francis S. Gabreski faced the obstacles and dangers with boundless spirit and courage. It is outrageous to consider what military flying is really like and just how dangerous and amazing it truly is. It's as mystical as knights fighting in medieval times. Francis S. Gabreski, Long Island resident and American hero, knew just what it meant to be a fighter pilot.

eyes right at the point. It is especially easy to see if you've trained for four months in the Minor Leagues living on the beach at Kihei, Maui, Hawaii with a mai tai in your hand. Well, the Major Leagues. The sun sets. Everybody applauds. Everybody has another drink.

I'm not for a minute suggesting that the chambers of commerce out here begin to beat the drum about watching the Green Flash over the ocean in the Hamptons in the wintertime. As you can see, conditions have to be just right. And until now, they haven't been.

Still, on January 29, in what is supposed to be the very heart of the winter, temperatures rose to 61 degrees and down at the beach late that afternoon at Sagg Main, I saw the Green Flash once again. It was, I believe, the very last day the sun set over the ocean and I had to walk down to the water's edge to see it, but I did and there it was.

With global warming, they say it's a trend. Maybe the chambers of commerce SHOULD consider advertising the Green Flash in the Hamptons in the wintertime. More and more, we'll be getting them. Next will come palm trees, flamingos and pelicans.

they do at Good Fish."

Half an hour after that, the sun began setting and I said goodbye. I was blind drunk. I staggered down the beach, grasping onto the overhanging vines to keep myself upright. When I got back to the cottage, Cat was sitting in a chair reading.

"You've been more than two hours," she said.

"I've been setting things up for tomorrow's Super Bowl," I said.

Then I fell on the floor.

The next morning I woke up all excited. It was Super Bowl Sunday. The Patriots versus the Rams. At 11, I went up to the office, which was open even though it was supposed to be closed and told James about the problem with the TV card.

"Janice Davis, the owner of the club, is flying in this afternoon," he said. "I'll tell her to go to the place and get a card."

I asked James if he would call the Naval Base for me and he said he would be happy to do so. He got out a telephone directory, the 1995 edition, and looked up a number. Then he dialed it and handed me the phone.

"Hello?"

A nice American girl's voice. I explained my situation. Anxious New Yorker looking for a place to watch the Super Bowl.

"I really appreciate your situation, but we have very tight security here just now. No civilians."

"I have a passport. It has my picture on it. Shows who I am."

"You are going to miss one hell of a Super Bowl party, though. It's starting right about now. There's about four hundred people. It's a national holiday. Who are you rooting for?"

"The Patriots."

"They don't stand a chance."

"How about something else?" I asked. "Do you know what time it's on? And what local channel other than the Armed Forces Network is carrying it?"

I heard her put her hand over the speaker. Anybody know when the game goes on? We got a nut case American can't find the Super Bowl, she said. Then her hand was off the phone. "Six fifteen," she said. "Fox. And the Bahamian station, ZBS-12. We think. By the way, I have another idea for you. We're the main base, forty miles from you. But we have a satellite base just down the road from you. Base Two. Six guys work there. Let me transfer you to them. Maybe they've got some ideas."

"That would be very kind of you," I said.

But that was a dead end, too. Base Two had no TV. Four of the six guys had gone back to the main base for the party. And the rules said there had to be at least two people at Base Two at all times. So they were stuck.

"It's a sad day here," one of them said.

A kickoff at six-fifteen was a reprieve of sorts. Maybe Janice, the owner, would fly in with the new card. Maybe Lee would find it on the local channel.

Back at the bar at the Good Fish, about two p.m., I saw what I was sure was an American. He was about five foot ten, about sixty years old, had a three day growth of beard, a straw hat and shirt and shorts covered with grease. I went up and introduced myself.

"Name's Billy," he said.

"Big game today," I said.

"Oh yeah?" he asked.

"Super Bowl."

"That's on today?"

Billy had retired on Andros. He'd been here twelve years. Married an island girl. He was who you called to fix a boat engine and he'd come around on his bicycle.

"Janice, who's flying over, she's got to bring me two gaskets. I can fix her engine in twenty minutes, if she gets me the right ones."

"I'm hoping she will bring over a TV card," I said. "They can't get the Super Bowl unless they renew the TV card."

"I'd watch the Super Bowl," Billy said. "If I get the channel. Come over to my house. James knows where I live."

At six p.m., Cat and I are in our cottage and a huge tropical thunderstorm passes over. You can't see ten feet for the rain. Nobody is going anywhere until this is over. It is still pouring at six-fifteen the time of the kickoff. At six-twenty the rain stops.

It is six-thirty. Dark. At the office, I learn Janice has been delayed and will be coming over on the morning flight. But there is still Billy. By six-forty, I am with Katie, who works for James and we are in her car, bumping our way down the rutted road toward Billy's house two miles away. She keeps turning the wipers on and off as the water from the storm keeps collecting on the windshield.

"If he's not there, we'll just turn around and go home," I say. "Or if he is there and there is no game, I don't want to interfere with his family. We'll go home."

We arrive at the house. It is all dark inside.

"His bicycle is here," Katie says.

Paul, please don't go! Hopefully, we're kidding. Paul Simon and wife Edie Brickell are buying a home in Connecticut. It is thought that this new home will be in addition to his home in Montauk. If you were at the summer Southampton College last summer, you know why we really can't have him move. It was spectacular.

Our favorite Piano Man also likes the idea of a couple of houses to go to when the mood hits him. After the well-publicized selling of his East Hampton house to Jerry Seinfeld for 32 million, he then put roots down in Sag Harbor for an 8 million dollar house. What makes this so... well, just plain cool... is that the second house is summer retreat on Shelter Island.. Think of it this way, if he forgets his toothbrush, he can go back and get it.

If you want to see Billy on the water this summer in one of his amazing boats that he and his partner build on request on Shelter Island then maybe you should consider taking the safe boating course at the Jamesport Community Center. This is something that we back and feel more people should consider before turning over the boat to the kids to use this summer. Call 298-8563.

It may be just us a few of us here who are unenlightened but the word...ahhh.... vagina is still a little difficult to say out loud. So if you want to hear it outloud and really funny head over to Southampton College this weekend to see the groundbreaking, Obie Award Winning play "The Vagina Monologues". It will be performed as part of the V-Day (violence against women) College Campaign. Call (631) 287-8236 for the details. Whew...

Mitchell Manning Associates, Ltd. is and has been for a long time a hard act to follow as far as events to go to and be seen at. Looks like the Astra Party to kick off the Hampton Designer Showcase at Villa Maria was a tremendous success. If you didn't catch the party or the showcase itself last year...mark your calendars for this summer. June 29 thru July 27. 20,000 people can't be wrong! South Of The Highway Magazine was there and it was a feast for the eyes..

The weekend artist haunt, The Hansom House in Southampton will be closing their doors for good after thirty years. Owner John Jakes is packing up everything and moving to Route 1, Dennyville in far northern Maine. He will be missed and we wish him well.

"Yeah, but he's not."

"He's there." Katie flashes her headlights and honks her horn. After awhile, Billy, naked from the waist up, appears at the front door, shielding his eyes from the headlights. He is wearing pajama bottoms. His hair is uncombed. I get out of the car and stand next to it so he can see who it is.

"Thought you might be watching the game," I say meekly.

"Nah. Don't get it. The wife and I are spending the evening at home. Resting up."

Sure looked that way. "Sorry to bother you," I say.

We drive back to the club. And so I do not get to watch the Super Bowl.

The next morning, Monday, I wake up totally disgusted with myself. I have failed. But not only have I failed, I have made a complete fool of myself. I have gotten the staff of some fishing club all headed off on a wild goose chase. I have wasted a day of vacation, ignoring both Cat and everything the Good Fish Club has to offer. I might as well have spent the day on the cell phone or pushing paperwork around or working hard at the office, nose to the grindstone. Cat and I go to breakfast in the dining room but I eat in silence. I can hear the TV yakking away in the bar nearby, its shiny new TV card firmly in place.

After breakfast, Janice, the main partner of the Good Fish, and Arnold Lee, the other partner, invite me to go flyfishing with them in the lagoon for a couple of hours, just the three of us. I ask Cat. She says it will do me a world of good. In fifteen minutes I am off in a seventeen-foot flat-bottomed speedboat. We have a cooler of soda, some bait, rod and tackle, broad sun hats.

For half an hour, we zip along at about thirty miles an hour until we get to a spot known as the Dressing Room. We can see clear to the bottom, and for awhile we watch for and find fish, leading them with short casts when we see them. We're not having much luck, though. Then, off on the horizon, we see another tropical storm coming. It's twenty minutes away, I'm told.

"Let's go to Bang Bang Key," Lee says. "Unless we want to get wet."

It's explained to me that this is the former property of Al Capone, that there are underground tunnels where he stashed loot, that it will be something to see. I agree and off we go, running ahead of the storm. After ten miles at high speed, we arrive. Bang Bang Key is about three acres in size. There are palm trees, boulders and up on a little hill, a lot of old abandoned buildings, some of which are being restored. There are ladders leaning against the walls of some of them.

We arrive at a half rebuilt dock, tie up and walk onto the island just as the first drops of rain begin to fall.

"Hey Georgie!" Lee shouts.

From behind a building there comes Georgie Wells carrying a welding torch. He sets it down and comes down to meet us.

We find shelter at a picnic table on a porch under a corrugated roof. The rain bangs down. And we talk. Mostly it's about politics, a regatta on Exuma, a new government ordinance. Georgie has just bought the place and has taken up residence here while he rebuilds it. Friends of his keep stopping by, he says. He brings us cold beers he has in a refrigerator somewhere and we suck on them, making little smacking noises. After awhile, the storm passes. We get up and Georgie accompanies us down toward the dock.

"How about them Patriots," he says.

I can hardly believe this. "The Patriots WON?"

"Oh yes. What a game. They got ahead 17 to 3. Then in the fourth quarter they put their guard down. The Rams catch up. Now it's 17-17. The fans are going crazy. And the Patriots march down the field in the closing minute and they kick a field goal. A great game."

"You SAW the game?" I ask.

"Oh no. I'm here all the time. No TV here. I heard it on the radio."

The last time I saw Georgie Wells he was standing on the dock, grinning and waving at us as we headed off. I took a picture of him. Here it is.

The Sheltered Islander By Sally Flynn

Observations of an Islander # 187

Last week, I explained Groundhog Day and now that you're all up-to-date on your rodents-in-the-news, it's time to explain Valentine's Day.

We begin our journey a little before February 14, 290 A.D., in Rome on the Feast Of Lupercalia. It was a Tuesday. It was popularly accepted that on that date birds chose their mates. Fertility rituals were held on this day. You know those Romans, any excuse for a party. The night before the festival started, it was customary for the names of the Roman girls to be written on slips of paper. These slips were then placed in a container and then each boy drew a name of the girl who he would be coupled with for the entire Lupercalia festival. Today we call this, "Spring Break."

Emperor Claudius the Second, the vicious, perverted and insane ruler of Rome at the time, was a warrior-wannabe. He was very distressed that his armies never had enough soldiers to rape and pillage the monthly selection of the Conquered People & Places of the Month Club. Claudius couldn't figure out why more young men didn't want to go to battle and die in agony in faraway places. Finally, he decided that the problem was that young men didn't want to leave their wives, girlfriends, sheep, et al. In order to remedy this, the Emperor instituted a new law that canceled all of the marriages and engagements in Rome. Seems reasonable to me...

Meanwhile, back at the Coliseum, there lived a priest in Rome by the name of Valentinius. This was the time of persecution of the early Christians. Valentine, who did not believe in the Emperor's new groove, refused to obey. He continued to perform wedding ceremonies in secret. Finally, the day came when Bishop Valentine was caught performing a marriage ceremony. The Emperor condemned him to be put to death, the standard Roman solution for anything they disliked.

While Valentine was imprisoned and waiting for his execution, many young couples threw notes of thanks along with flowers and other gifts into the window of his cell.

Exhaustive research on my part revealed a little remembered detail of this story: a street vendor named Hallmarkus, a real sharpie, knew a business opportunity when he saw it. He quickly set up a little papyrus kiosk near Valentine's window. When people arrived and wanted to write a nice little note, but suddenly remembered that paper hadn't been invented yet, they said, "Ah, I know, we'll get some papyrus from Hallmarkus."

It is recorded that while in prison, Valentine miraculously restored the sight of the daughter of his judge, Asterias. The same judge who condemned him to be beaten with clubs and then beheaded.

Finally, the day arrived when Bishop Valentine was to die. It was the fourteenth of February in the year 270 AD, the Feast of Lupercalia. On his path to martyrdom, he was accompanied by his former judge, who together with all of his family had converted to Christianity. Valentine wrote a farewell message to the daughter of Asterias which he signed "Your Valentine."

And there it is, the cultural connection. Three events collide and dovetail into history, the big time fertility parties of Lupercalia, the execution of Bishop Valentine, who performed marriages and the business acumen of Hallmarkus enabling him to forecast trends.

In the year 496 AD, Pope Gelasius did away with the festival of Lupercalia, citing that it was pagan and immoral. Like me, you're thinking it took the Church 226 years to condemn the Feast of Lupercalia as pagan and immoral? Well, all I can say is, that must have been some fertility festival. Pope Gelasius then chose Bishop Valentine as the patron saint of lovers, who would be honored at the new festival on the fourteenth of February, henceforth known as St. Valentine's Day.

BIDE A WEE'S "HAVE A HEART" GALA

Bide A Wee held their seventh annual "Have A Heart" Gala Dinner Dance in the Grand Ballroom of the Pierre Hotel. The event benefits Bide A Wee's animal shelters and celebrates the role pets play in our lives. This year the gala honored true national heroes, our service dogs and their human partners and Dr. Mark E. Peterson, DVM. The role rescue dogs and their human partners played at the site of the WTC tragedy is an inspiration to us all. The evening was a festive black tie affair with entertainment by the Tom Costello Orchestra.

DIFFA'S DINING BY DESIGN

The fifth annual Elle Décor Dining by Design to benefit the industries fight against AIDS was held at the Hammerstein Ballroom in New York City. Champagne Tattinger uncorked Avi Adler's masterpiece of a 16-foot tall table, which gave the illusion of looking out through a champagne bottle. It was really cool! Film Director, John Waters (Hairspray), and architect David Rockwell featured a 300-pound chandelier made of hair. These were just two of my favorites of over fifty fabulous tables where guests were seated to enjoy the sumptuous dinner. Since 1984 DIFFA has provided over $30 million to hundreds of AIDS organizations nationwide.

DI MODOLO

Want to see the flavor of the Hampton's without the traffic? I did. Two events at jewelry locations. The first stop was Di Modolo, Milano, on Madison for a party to honor Denise Wohl and to kick off a campaign to benefit Concerned Parents for AIDS Research, a passion of two fine people Carol and Jerry Gertz who lost their daughter Alison to AIDS and sparked an awareness campaign a decade ago. Many of the guests were from Westhampton and you saw tight fitting designer outfits, some guys kissing other guys "Hello", talk of golf and skiing weekends, and of course, jewelry.

TIFFANY

Only a few blocks walk away, and no tie-up where Route 27 becomes one lane, was event #2 at Tiffany's, called "Penguins" and "Pearls". This was also a kickoff campaign for the Bronx Zoo. As you entered guests were greeted by two women who danced as swans near the entrance, depicting silent beauty and setting the serene mood. The guests were mostly Southamptonites and that meant handshakes or light kisses on both cheeks. There was a cocktail party, a silent auction and a live auction conducted by the very lively James Niven of Sotheby's. With a wireless mike, Niven could walk around the second floor of Tiffany's and get right in the face of prospective bidders like Leonard Stern, and it worked. The guests were many of the familiar faces seen in the style and social pages of the Times and upscale local magazines.

At Castello di Borghese, Let Them Eat Cake

On Saturday, February 9, cake sculpting and cookie specialist Arlene Abrams and Castello di Borghese/ Hargrave Vineyard in Cutchogue held a tasting of Arlene's wine cookies, which will be sold exclusively in the vineyard's tasting room, made with Castello di Borghese's 1998 Cabernet Sauvignon. A specialist in three-dimensional cake sculpting, Arlene creates cakes that can duplicate a favorite pet, a hobby, a piece of sporting equipment or even a wine bottle. Her creations have appeared in Newsday as well as in Great Chefs of Long Island.

Inspired by Borghese's current vintage of cabernet sauvignon, Arlene also developed a wine cake, which she made in the shape of a heart, to celebrate the wine country's Wine & Romance weekend, February 9 and 10, sponsored by the Long Island Wine Council.

"We had a lot of fun," said Jack Oxee, advertising consultant for Borghese/Hargrave. "The cake is made from a recipe similar to that for the cookies, which are just loaded with chocolate. In addition, on Sunday we held a barrel tasting of our 2000 Cabernet Franc (due to be released in April). The combination of the cabernet franc and the cake prompted one elated guest to exclaim, 'This is orgasmic!'"

The recipe for the seductive cake appears in the LI Wine Council's newly released cookbook, Wine & Romance, and the cookies are now available for purchase at the vineyard. What a great way to expand the enjoyment of wine right into dessert.

While the cake may have elicited ecstasy when paired with the cabernet franc, "Wait till you try the wine cookies with our pinot noir," said Jack. Hmmmn...

Cornell and Farm Bureau Executives Honored by Long Island Wine Council

Joe Gergela, executive director of the Long Island Farm Bureau and tireless advocate of East End farmers, and Bill Sanok, agricultural programs advisor for Cornell Cooperative Extension, received emeritus memberships in the Long Island Wine Council on Friday, January 25, at the Council's annual bash.

"These presentations were made in recognition of the many years of support and hard work these two gentlemen have given to the Long Island wine industry," said Harold Watts, Council president and owner of Ternhaven Cellars in Greenport. "Bill has been associated with the wine industry here since it began almost 30 years ago (my, how time flies!). He was the only one from Cornell Cooperative who knew anything about grapes and he went out of his way to help everyone.

"Joe has been a stalwart supporter and has worked ceaselessly on our behalf on issues facing our industry. He has been our lobbying arm with the legislature for many years and continues to work closely with the LI Wine Council, constantly promoting our wines."

Congratulations, Joe and Bill, and many thanks for all of your wonderful work.

The party, held at Cornell Extension's office in Riverhead, "was relaxed and fun," said Jane Baxter Lynn, the Council's executive director. "We had a great turn out of people and the atmosphere was upbeat. We were treated to unusual and scrumptious food prepared by new Shelter Island-based catering company Virtual Gourmet and, of course, the wines were great!"

Gourmet food, world-class wines... And you thought nothing exciting happened here on the North Fork in the wintertime. Cheers.

Amazon Grill

Main Road, Mattituck
631-298-5400

By Susan W. Simm

Guacamole, nachos, arroz con pollo and quesadillas. Mexican fare, right? Well, what many of us think of as Mexican cuisine is often a combination of American Southwestern, Mexican, South American, Central American and Spanish cooking.

Now, there's a new kid on the block in Mattituck and, with a name like Amazon Grill, the emphasis is unabashedly focused on Latin and South America. But many of our usual favorites are also players here in this colorful little restaurant in the Waldbaum's shopping center. Yes, you'll find nachos grande (which are, by the way, first rate) and a Santa Fe chicken wrap, but you'll also encounter Brazilian skewered shrimp, seafood paella (in a nod to Spain's influence on South America) and smothered Peruvian sliced steak. You'll even find, surprisingly, Greek salad and a Caribbean-style shrimp wrap made with jerk spices and mango sauce.

"We consider Amazon Grill a Latin wraps restaurant with influences from all of the above cuisines," said Marshall Bonnes, a co-owner of the stylish spot. "Our chef, Pepe Munoz (formerly of the Margarita Grill in Westhampton), is Ecuadorian." That influence is particularly apparent in a current special, Steak Amazonia, a marinated steak quickly grilled, sliced over rice and topped with chopped tomatoes, red onions, cilantro and fresh lime juice. It is delicious and, at $12.95, a best buy here on the North Fork.

The small café-style restaurant occupies a space that housed a Taco Bell, a venture that failed, before it was transformed into Amazon in mid-December of last year. "When Taco Bell was here, they used microwaves to heat food," said Marshall. "We installed a full kitchen cooking line to prepare all of our dishes fresh. We make all sauces, salsa, guacamole and dressings on the premises daily."

That attention to quality is evident in all dishes sampled. Among the appetizers, the coco loco shrimp is a standout. Crisp, greaseless and perfectly cooked, they are served with a small cup of mango dipping sauce atop fresh greens. Also excellent are the above-mentioned nachos, available with beef, beans, grilled chicken, grilled steak, chili or guacamole. This is a BIG order and can easily be shared by three as a starter. Untested but interesting sounding are the mussels caliente, steamed mussels in a jalapeno-seafood broth and spicy cheese fries, seasoned curly fries with melted jack and cheddar cheeses. A vegetarian offering of a grilled jumbo mushroom topped with roasted red peppers, grilled scallions and melted cheese also sounds appealing, but the fiesta fingers, chicken fingers served with a salsa fiesta sauce, sound a little more like typical fast food.

Quesadillas and tacos are fresh, light and flavorful. Both are available with grilled steak or shrimp, grilled vegetables or grilled chicken. The chef is excellent on the grill and stops short of drying out boneless chicken breast, a typical shortfall, and with steak he is nothing less than a wizard. When was the last time you ordered a taco with grilled steak and had the steak actually arrive medium rare?

Among the salads offered, the Amazon garden salad, a combination of fresh greens, chopped tomatoes, cucumbers, red onion and black olives is a perfect accompaniment to the spicy fare with its robust vinaigrette. The caesar salad, tossed with a homemade, classic-style dressing (no mayonnaise here) is better than most but beware, this is for garlic lovers only! The same salad appears in Amazon's signature wraps and is highly recommended in this preparation.

Wraps are news here and they are superb. The fajita wraps were among the best I've had on the East End and are available with grilled chicken, steak or shrimp. Also tasty are the Santa Fe wrap (a popular item) and bean burrito. A pesto wrap, though untried, sounds intriguing with chicken, rice, grilled peppers and mushrooms.

Among the entrees sampled, besides the Steak Amazonia, the arroz con pollo (Spanish for rice with chicken) is a standout. Made with boneless breast, this dish is spicy without being overly hot and includes tomatoes, onions and peas. Also recommended are the seafood paella and viva la chicken, a milder entrée made with boneless breast of chicken topped with chopped tomato salad and a melted blend of cheeses. Not yet tried is a jalapeno-baked red snapper and Brazilian shrimp kabobs served over rice.

Simply stylin' at Amazon Grill

A serve yourself condiment station is in the works and will include some unusual Latin and South American specialties, such as green chili sauce and mole sauce.

Amazon Grill opens daily at 10:30 a.m. and offers lunch specials, including wraps and salads, from $4.95-6.95, including beverage, and Tuesday is Two Taco day: buy one, get one free.

While waiting for their wine and beer license, the restaurant is serving soda, coffee, and tea. To come are fruit smoothies, beer, wine and sangria.

When Marshall isn't behind the counter at Amazon, you can find him behind the line at Michelangelo's, an Italian eatery in Cutchogue that shares some owners with Amazon, where he is head chef. He and wife Kari, also a co-owner at Amazon, formerly owned Marchello's and the Garden Grill in Smithtown. Stop by and try their latest venture, already on its way to becoming a success story here on the North Fork. It is a much-needed, high quality carry out or eat-in establishment.

Shop 'til You Drop...With Maria Tennariello

Well this is a great weekend. My mom and sister came out for a visit and after spending the entire night chatting and laughing, we decided to dedicate the entire next day doing what we all love to do...shopping! The apple doesn't fall far from this tree!

I am a lover of stained and leaded glass, so I thought I would check out Designer Glass by SGO on Montauk Highway in East Quogue. What a fabulous store with lots of beautiful colorful glass in every design you can imagine. There is stained glass overlay, beveled, etched and carved glass, custom engraving, window tinting, entry doors, mirrors, tub and shower enclosures just to name a few. When I left that shop I envisioned my entire house done in all that beautiful glass. Wow!

At Casual Home on County Road 39 look for a great sale going on right now on country furnishings, accessories and of course, a great selection of bar and counter stools. Love this store.

Anne Moore on Main Street in Bridgehampton is having a very tempting sale on her fine hats. All fall/winter and some summer hats are reduced 50%. I especially love the felt, fur and velour, so guess what? You bet, I bought a few. Thinking spring and Hampton summer events, I even bought a summer straw – I couldn't resist.

Also on Bridgehampton's Main Street at Nancy & Co. you will love the "huge blowout sale" that is going on right now. This is Nancy's newest location; great deals are here for the taking. Shop 'til You Drop with deals like $5 to $100. I can't tell you the bargains we all got!

East Hampton's Fi Fi La Roo at The Circle is having a 50% off sale on Fresh soap, body and face wash moisturizer and tonic wash, along with Bliss products and Demeter perfumes and many other cosmetics. Now is the time to stock up on these products if you love them like I do. Fi Fi also has facial, waxing, etc. available. Call for information at 329-5166.

Turpan located on Main Street in East Hampton has a wonderful selection of candles along with special body products and personal care products by Ole Henrikson, Commes des Garcon perfumes and homewares by Alessi. This is the definite stop shop for those up to the minute gifts.

Look no further, Side Show on Newtown Lane has a lot going on this sale season. Rochelle has done her best to clear out the shop for new spring arrivals. There are 50% off sales on winter merchandise such as sweaters, long sleeve tees, long sweater coats, shoes, jeans and skirts. Look for special bonus T-shirts and tank tops that are just $10. My sister left with an extra large shopping bag full of "great buys." There is definitely something for everyone here, so hurry; the early bird gets the worm...

Let's not forget about Sag Harbor Florist & Gift Shop on Bay Street. This shop has lots of wonderful and exciting florals, cut flowers, indoor begonia baskets, cut and potted tulips and hundreds of cut flowers. There is something for everyone here. Check it out...

Nearby at Broken Colour Works on Bay and Division Street in Sag Harbor look for a cool winter sale with up to 50% off all merchandise. This great little shop has custom painted pine furniture, children's furnishings, garden pieces, sophisticated lighting and accessories. Also upholstery and faux finishings are services that we all need to know about.

On Main Street at The Ideal Stationery store I found beautiful gifts, office and art supplies, cards, gift wrapping, stuffed animals, personal stationery and much, much more.

Well, time to wrap it up and get on home. We are having dinner this evening at Rubi Red on the Montauk Highway in East Hampton.

Until next week. Ciao and Happy Shopping!

Guy de Fraumeni's HOLLYWOOD in The Hamptons

The Hollywood in the Hamptons crowd (now reduced to a minor mob by winter) can be seen frequenting Wainscott's Rubi Red Restaurant. The place crawls with Mediterranean heat, thawing out any cool reserve that might hinder someone from ripping apart a movie. Last week, thrown to the dogs (or I should say, wolves) as food for thought and dismemberment, were Brotherhood of the Wolf and I Am Sam. Brotherhood was carved up and devoured with relish and Sam was treated like Green Ham, which it resembles in so many ways.

A French film (I like it already) with sub-titles–a caution to those who don't like to read in movie houses–it's not just for France, where it's an immense hit, but, it is also FUN for anyone who'd like to escape thinking (except, of course, maybe reading). Director, Christophe Gans tosses together just about every film genre except the musical (although, Jessie Nelson, I Am Sam's director does just that to divert you from her trying goings-on). Mr. Gans' colossal pastiche starts with the 1770's awe-inspiring myth, The Beast of Gevaudan, as well-known to the French as Brigitte Bardot's bikini which is equally awe-inspiring. Into an 18th-century provincial town, where we see a young woman attacked by something supernaturally strong, come two cloaked figures on horseback to the rescue of another young woman being attacked by a very mad (and wet) mob. With every forcibly nouveau film technique, the movie's hero (a naturalist who has come to investigate the mystery of the beast), saves the woman with extremely swift whacks of his Kendo stick in ultra fast Hong-Kong-style that would make Bruce Lee weep with admiration. Silently watching is his Iroquois Indian sidekick (yes, from the New World) and you know there will be something in the pot for everyone of every taste, even though in the end there has been a lot of bad taste. You realize you've had a belly-full of belly laughs because Brotherhood propels you, Musketeer-style, knee-deep in those tall skinny boots, through a lot of French swashbuckling, French female nudity, French conspiracies, French social criticism, French martial arts, French bestiality, French treachery, religious whipping, cream whip, history, French tartes, and prostitutes (a la carte), incest and enough french fried thrills to keep you talking for days!

Shame, shame on you, too, I Am Sam, for enough uplifting, heart-squeezing and Beatle nostalgia to make lovers of Kramer vs Kramer sick! Sam, is mentally challenged and attempting to regain custody of his seven year-old daughter. Sam is portrayed by Sean Penn in a serious performance marred by making him a too–moronic, sissyfied, seemingly soggy lampoon version of Rain Man in a shallow puddle of coo-chy-coo courtroom conflict with more commercial time for Starbucks than TV would allow.

Guy-Jean de Fraumeni is the producer / writer / director of award winning European films and Network TV. He has judged the major Film and TV award competitions. He is assisted in this column by Sarah Halsey.

Just Eve, Forget Adam

What do Glenn Close, Lilly Tomlin, Naomi Campbell, Claire Danes, Susan Surandon and Whoopi Goldberg all have in common? They are women who have a grasp of their femininity. They all call Eve Ensler a friend and each of them is a participant in performances of The Vagina Monologues. This Thursday six local actresses will join the worldwide observance of V-day and perform The Vagina Monologues at Southampton College, with proceeds going to benefit local women's charities.

Eve Ensler is the activist and playwright who created The Vagina Monologues, the success of which has given her enourmous clout, which she used to create V-day to raise awareness worldwide about the rape and battery of women. V-day's mission is simple – end all violence against women. This year were are over 500 performances of The Vagina Monologues on Valentines Day, with proceeds going to support the liberation of battered women. HBO will also premier it's original documentary comprised of interviews with abused women and a special presentation of the monologues performed by Eve Ensler.

She proclaims, "I say vagina because I want people to respond." The idea for the play first came about as an accident. She was talking to a friend who was in her 50s about the way her body was changing, when this woman starting confessing all of her private thoughts about her

ART COMMENTARY

With Marion Wolberg Weiss

Last week's commentary featured current anti-war films and theater and we can't end there. Included in last week's overview was Magnum photographer Evan Fairbanks' moving video of September 11. The work serves as a strong personal reminder of how things used to be.

This critic got her first exposure to the Twin Towers and Battery Park via a walking tour conducted by an excellent guide, John Tauranac of New York University's continuing and professional studies. It now seems like a dream, considering that the landscape is totally changed. But what a sight (and site) the area presented that clear summer evening.

Aesthetically speaking, what appeared most prominent, were the diverse architectural styles of the skyscrapers, the buildings forming a towering tract we felt we could almost touch. Even so, the distance between the structures and us was considerable. Nearby Battery Park, however, provided an opposing atmosphere: post modern design (consider a 1930s gas light adorning a contemporary apartment building). Living quarters, the East River, parks and playgrounds presented a comforting, engulfing enclave, protecting the area from both the city's congestion and the World Trade Center's hustle and bustle.

Completing the post-modern look was public art by East Ender Ned Smyth: a beautiful, free-extending structure resembling an Asian temple. Its placement in a small park conveyed the idea that spiritual comfort should be accessible in both nature and a busy urban setting.

Seeing Evan Fairbanks' video about September 11 also reminded yours truly of all the artists who had studios in the Twin Towers. A current exhibit at the New Museum, entitled "World Views," celebrates their works. However, the show at the New Museum was a disappointment. The displayed works could have been created anyplace. We were expecting to see how the location of the studios (in the Twin Towers) might have had an impact on the work produced there. This, it turns out, was an unreasonable expectation, but the works displayed lacked distinction.

Battery Park, World War II Memorial

Recollections of September 11, aside, two art events recently made appearances in New York. One was The Museum of Radio and Television's series, "Descriptive Directors of British TV." The other which we saw was Alan Clarke's Made in Britain with Tim Roth in his first featured role.

The film is social realism in the 1980s, a style that enjoys a rich tradition in England, most recently employed by such directors as Mike Leigh (Secrets and Lies) and Ken Loach.

The documentary approach to Made in Britain gives it a powerful punch, as does Mr. Roth's performance as a thieving punk. The film shows the best and worst of Britain's penal system.

Another New York art experience is poetry readings every Thursday evening by the Urbana group. The performance space is currently in a SoHo basement below an art gallery. Talk about mixed media. The group organized in part by Taylor Mali, is art on a different level, where language and sounds are the primary media. The mostly young poets are dedicated and talented, exposing personal experiences and social commentary.

The open-mike sessions provoke lots of variety and loud laughs as well. Such performances reinforce the notion that art is not only visual.

Honoring the Artist: Helen Meyrowitz

Artist Helen Meyrowitz is nobody's fool, and on this week's cover she shares some qualities with her festive figures. She's certainly spunky and spirited and as history tells us, court fools were, in reality, quite wise.

That's Ms. Meyrowitz: chances are she'll be able to respond with insight on a variety of subjects. (Yours truly speaks from experience. Conversing with her is nothing less than a joy.)

In a nutshell, the artist's figures may represent her own alter ego, if I may be so bold to suggest such a thing. At the very least, Ms. Meyrowitz' images recall Jung's archetypes, characters that we recognize intuitively, drawn from our "collective unconscious." While this concept seems like so much mumble-jumble, Ms. Meyrowitz consistently gives life to Jung's ideas through her drawings.

This week's cover, taken from the artist's "Capriccio" series, conjures up other interpretations: the clowns represent opposing selves à la Freud or even the opposition at play in Eastern religions. Yet Ms. Meyrowitz takes a more direct approach. "This work was inspired by a series by Goya. It's supposed to be lighthearted," she says, showing characteristically good humor. "This drawing was included in The Book of Fools. You know images of fools have been quite important. Think of the one who dared tell the truth to King Lear. The Sage Fool, on the other hand, comes from mythology. The clown Emmett Kelly was an example of this."

Ms. Meyrowitz is currently working on a new series. From her description, it seems entirely different: organic and geometric forms featuring configurations such as floor plans and trees from nature. She's calling the series, "Site-ing Folio" and, from the sound of it, its technique also represents a departure: torn sheets from a watercolor pad executed with oil bar and graphite pencil. "There's lots of texture and lines in these drawings," said Ms. Meyrowitz.

"The line excites me," the artist made clear. Which makes sense for someone who's known for her drawings, despite the fact that Ms. Meyrowitz was trained as a painter having spent a year at Pratt Institute. She also taught life drawing and earned an M.A. from C.W. Post College.

Ms. Meyrowitz is not one to let challenges pass her by. She continues to keep her "hand" in many other things besides drawing (pardon the pun). Her involvement includes curating chores as exhibition chairperson for the National Drawing Association and she is an active participant in diverse classes and discussion groups dealing with the arts.

Recently, Ms. Meyrowitz was involved in her thirty-year retrospective at Adelphi University. If that wasn't enough, you can experience the fruits of her labor in the current exhibit, "Drawn to Size," at C.W. Post College's Hillwood Museum until March 3.

When all is said and done, regardless of Ms. Meyrowitz' various professional pursuits, it's her special persona which informs her art and life. It is one of opposition, like her clowns on the cover. On one hand, there are her graceful gait and casual eloquence, her ability to get to the essence of things and her penchant for detail. Conversely, Ms. Meyrowitz is a down-to-earth, fun-loving spirit just like her well-known figures.

Ms. Meyrowitz' works can be seen at East Hampton's Arlene Burjese Gallery.

vagina. This event fascinated Ensler and led to over 200 interviews with women from New York, Yugoslavia and beyond. Ensler found the same issues were illuminated by women from completely different areas of the world. She started to draw parallels between the stories she heard and the tortured ideas of femininity. These women, some whose stories were so compelling that she felt they needed to be told, or others with a commonality so strong, joined by sometimes mundane thoughts, resonated with Ensler. She examines how women reshape, change and adapt themselves and their bodies in order to fit their culture. What she found was that although cultures are different, these themes are universal.

It is rare that women have an urge to speak about their vaginas. Lets face it, for some people it is even odd to see the word vagina printed on a page. It is often uttered in a hushed tone, eliciting blushed cheeks and giggles. It is rare that women can feel OK about even using that word in public. So why is it that The Vagina Monologues have gained so much acclaim that 800 performances are planned across the country for the first half of this year? There is something empowering about this performance. It is OK that women talk about their bodies; it is OK for people to yell and even laugh; it's OK to have imperfections.

It is a modern variation on, "I am women hear me roar," which is made so poignant by Ensler's commitment to saving women from gender apartheid in Afghanistan and Bosnia. Her efforts have led to a safe house for abused women in Kenya. She has traveled to South Africa with Colista Flockhardt to educate people about the mutilation of 130 million women's genitalia. She has devoted her career to making people aware of the universal issues that plague women all over the world.

When The Vagina Monologues premiered in New York in 1997, it was met with critical acclaim. What has grown from those early performances is a feminist movement with more momentum and support than women's issues have seen in decades. As Glenn Close put it, "You don't just hook up with Eve. You become part of her crusade. There's a core of us who are Eve's army." But The Vagina Monologues is not just for activists. It is a great example of how theater can really move us, make us laugh at ourselves and reexamine our own conventions, even if we still may blush a bit at the "V" word. –J. Romm

The Vagina Monologues will appear at Southampton College's Avram Theater February 15, 16 at 7:00 p.m and February 17 at 1:00 p.m.

silvia lehrer's cooking column

As I pour over recipes, my mouth waters with curiosity at the prospect of trying the many that inspire me. Some of the dishes are exotic and romantic with special ingredients that could be expensive – or inaccessible. With my adventuresome food spirit, I'm always ready to try something new. More often than not, however, these recipes simply pile up.

I find simple fare, such as the one-dish meal, appealing at this time of year. Cooked chicken and vegetables served atop a crisp noodle pancake incorporates protein, vegetables and starch in a simple, economical and nutritious dish.

A warming chili con carne, a rustic meal-in-one dish is always welcome. Chili aficionados insist that a "pure" chili is made with well-marbled beef chuck cut into tiny cubes or slivers (not ground beef) and never does it combine beans or, at times, even tomatoes. For me chili becomes a complete dining experience with a bowl of hot rice and slices of crusty bread for swabbing up the last bit of chili. As to whether or not to add beans and/or tomatoes or any other ingredients to make it hot, hot, hot...what you want to put in, you put in–what you want to leave out, leave out!

CHICKEN WITH NOODLE PANCAKE AND GARLIC SAUCE

A one-dish meal that has it all!
Serves 4

1/2 pound vermicelli or fedelini, cooked al dente
4 tablespoons vegetable or peanut oil

Garlic Sauce:

3 cloves garlic, finely chopped
1 cup chicken broth
2 tablespoons low-sodium soy sauce
1/2 teaspoon snipped dried red pepper flakes
2 teaspoons cornstarch

For the chicken:

3 boneless, skinless chicken breast halves cut into 1/2-inch wide strips
2 carrots, trimmed and peeled into long thin strips
1/4–1/3 pound snow peas, trimmed and halved on diagonal
1/4 cup thinly sliced scallions, white and light green parts

Prepare pancake:

1. Cook the pasta in salted boiling water for 4-5 minutes until al dente. Drain the pasta and quickly run it under cold water to stop the cooking. Transfer to a clean kitchen towel and pat dry. In a bowl toss cooked pasta with one tablespoon oil.

2. In a 12-inch non-stick skillet heat 2 tablespoons oil over medium-high heat. Put in the pasta and flatten with spatula, shaping it into a large round. Cover and cook over low heat, shaking pan occasionally, about ten minutes or until golden brown and crisp. Adjust heat as necessary. Invert pancake onto baking sheet and slide back into skillet. Cook other side, about six minutes or until golden brown. Remove to platter and keep warm in a 180-degree oven.

3. Place garlic, broth, soy and pepper flakes in a bowl. Place cornstarch in a small dish. Stir in 1–2 tablespoons seasoned liquid to dissolve the cornstarch and return to the bowl.

4. In same skillet pancake cooked in heat remaining 1 tablespoon oil over medium heat. Add chicken; saute two to three minutes or until rawness is no longer visible. Transfer to a side dish.

5. Pour the sauce into the same skillet. Add carrots, snow peas and scallions, heat to the edge of a boil and cook, stirring about two minutes or until sauce thickens and vegetables are barely tender. Add chicken, mix well and cook two minutes longer.

To serve: Cut pancake into wedges, divide chicken mixture over the top of each wedge and serve hot.

CHILI CON CARNE

A comforting do-ahead chili stew on a chilly wintry night. Serve it with a bowl of white fluffy rice and top with toasted cumin seeds.

2 tablespoons olive or canola oil
1 large Spanish onion, finely chopped
3 cloves garlic, finely chopped
1 jalapeno or serrano pepper, seeded and chopped (optional)
2 pounds ground beef or shaved slivers of beef
1 can (1 lb.12.oz.) whole tomatoes and liquid
1/2 cup cold water
Coarse (kosher) salt to taste
2–3 teaspoons chili powder
1 1/2 teaspoon dried oregano
1 1/2 teaspoons paprika
1/2 teaspoon ground cumin
1 can (1 lb. 3 oz.) red kidney beans, drained

Garnish:

Toasted cumin seeds*
Freshly chopped red onion (optional)

1. Warm the oil in a heavy flameproof casserole or Dutch oven over medium heat. Add the onions, garlic and jalapeno or serrano, if using, adjust heat to medium and cook, stirring until the onions are translucent, about three to four minutes. Be careful not to brown.

2. Add beef and cook, stirring, until the meat loses its red color, about fifteen to eighteen minutes.

3. Season with salt to taste. Add tomatoes, tomato liquid, water and spices and stir to mix. Simmer for forytfive minutes, stirring occasionally. If chili thickens too rapidly as it cooks, add a little water. Taste to adjust seasoning if necessary. Add beans and simmer for fifteen minutes longer. Make up to one or two days ahead and reheat slowly. Serve hot with freshly cooked rice and chopped onion garnish, if desired.

To toast cumin seeds: Place one or two tablespoons cumin seeds in a dry non-stick skillet. Place over heat for a few seconds and when the seeds begin to "talk" to you they are ready.

Dining in The Hamptons

Side Dish
By Aji Jones

You heard it here first: The seventh annual Taste of the Nation benefit for Share our Strength will be on April 21 at Saracen this year. It'll be a "Hamptons Spring Brunch" from 1-4 and if it's anything like past years, will be a great way to sample the East End's finest fare. Not to mention some fine people watching, which usually includes the crème de la crème of foodies. Can't wait!

The Maidstone Arms' chef Paul del Favero is still on the "Tour de France" in spirit anyway. He continues his winter series on the food and wine of France on Sunday, February 24 with the cuisine of Toulouse. The special evening includes a three-course dinner paired with wines specially selected by wine connoisseur, Jarvis Wilcox. The evening begins with a cocktail reception in the Water Room at 6 p.m. Dinner begins at 6:30 p.m. The cost is $60 plus tax and gratuity. Call 324-5006 to make reservations. The Maidstone will be open for breakfast, lunch and dinner on Monday, February 18, President,s Day.

Vacation time for George Korten & the staff of George Martin in Southampton they,ll close for winter vacation February 18 and reopen on March 5.

Now you can "Eat at Joe's" five days a week! Eat at Joe's, East Hampton,s hometown cooking show starring chef and food personality Joe Ciminera, is now on LTV (channel 70) five days a week. The show airs on Mondays at 10 p.m., Tuesdays at 5 a.m., Wednesdays at 3:30 p.m., Fridays at 8:30 p.m. and Saturdays at 1:30 p.m. A new show is on each week. The next new episode will feature Rick Fletcher, chef from Sysco Foods and the guest host is actress Valerie David. They will prepare cumin crusted sea scallops with apple cider reduction and black truffle ragu. These shows will air the week of February 18.

If Valentine's Day wasn't enough for you, Tierra Mar in Westhampton Beach continues their wine tasting series Saturday, February 16 with "Champagne Tasting with Aphrodisiac Delights." The dinner begins at 7 p.m. and features a 4-course dinner paired with wines for $65 per person plus tax and gratuity. Just what those aphrodisiac delights will be was not available at press time do call for further info at 288-2700!

Good news Suki Zuki in Watermill is now open for lunch Tuesday through Friday from 12-3 p.m. And if you're out and about on a lunch date keepin mind Bobby Van's in Bridgehampton, 75 Main in Southampton and the Seafood Barge in Southold. All are open for lunch every day.

Did you know it was the Year of the Horse? That's as good a reason as any to eat lots of Chinese food. Phoenix Chinese Restaurant will celebrate the Chinese New Year on Saturday, February 23 & Sunday February 24 with a special dinner for $25.95 and a traditional "Lion Dance Show" from 7:30 to 8:30 p.m. You can call 537-0011 for more information and reservations.

Winter "steals & deals" Babette's Friday and Saturday prix fixe is $27.95 for three courses, and you can order anything on the menu.Now is the time for the budget conscious to sample chef Kevin Penner,s three star cuisine at Star Room because they're running a new prix fixe on Thursday, Friday and Sunday evenings from 6 to 10 p.m. Two courses are just $19.95. Le Soir in Bayport has a dinner special Sunday through Thursday order an entrée and you also get soup, salad, dessert and coffee. They start serving dinner at 5 p.m. and are closed Mondays.

And how about this for a deal: Keith Davis, owner of the Golden Pear is offering a great special throughout February: when you make a $10 purchase, you will get a certificate good for a mid-week breakfast special. The Golden Pear has locations in Southampton, Bridgehampton and East Hampton.

HEALTH & BEAUTY

Get Your "Man On"

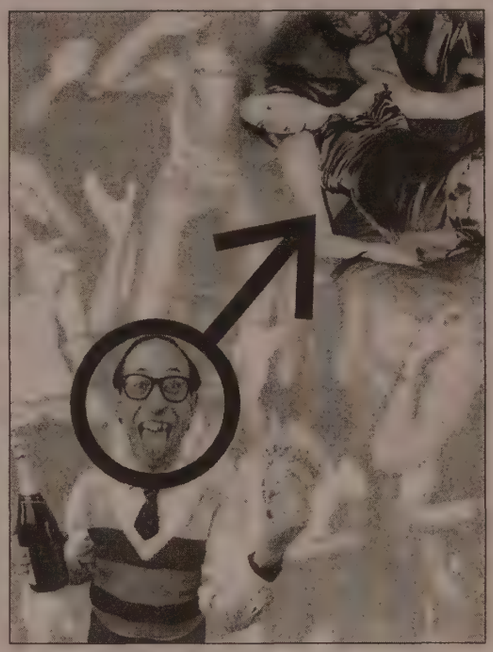
I am not a stud. Nor am I a horribly disfigured, Quasimodo-ish kind of guy. I am one of the millions of men who inhabit that middling area of attractiveness–somewhere between Brad Pitt and Jabba the Hut–that neither inspires drop-your-panties passion in the opposite sex, nor outright revulsion. I'm comfortable with that.

However, being in that middling range has made me acutely aware of the moments when women are attracted to me as opposed to the more-lengthy periods of time during which they couldn't care less that I walk the earth. Somewhere in this cycle, there is a pattern or an elusive ingredient that makes me attractive one day and unappealing the next. I need to find the ingredient.

The evidence that suggests the existence of this elusive pattern or element is experience and the experiences of other guys, who report a similar pattern in their own lives. If I go out regularly for three or four weeks, I will inevitably experience a two to three day period during which women are attracted to me, followed by weeks of general disinterest. ("Attraction" is measured by the number of women who approach me with a naughty little look in their eyes.)

I have discovered no correlation between clothing, cologne or grooming in these instances–and believe me, I have studied these variables closely–so I must be exuding some ineffable quality or chemical that provokes a response in the fairer sex. For the purposes of this piece, we will call these periods of appeal as having my "Man On." Having dismissed the obvious factors that would explain the Man On, my search must delve deeper, into the realms of psychology and science, for an answer.

Let's start easy. Power and money are considered to be great aphrodisiacs and many a woman has swooned for these qualities. This is perhaps a biological response that harks back to Homo sapiens hunter-gatherer days when a male's ability to provide food made him an attractive meal-ticket/mate. However, as I possess neither power nor money, this cannot explain the Man On in my case.



"Confidence is sexy," is perhaps the greatest cliché that any woman has ever uttered and, for all the lip service this line receives, a confident geek is sure to lose out to a cocky Adonis every day of the week. With that said, there is probably a confidence component to the Man On; when contemplating my Man On moments, I have invariably been feeling confident, but the origin of that confidence is worth questioning. There might be a self-fulfilling prophecy aspect to Man On confidence, in that the feeling of confidence may follow from the fact that women are suddenly finding me attractive one night and not that I am feeling confident and therefore women are finding me attractive. It is the eternal chicken/egg conundrum; which came first, the Man On or the confidence?

There is some credence to the theory that the Man On is a pheromone driven response. You can't see them, you can't smell them, but pheromones are the animal world's equivalent of a six-pack and Victoria's Secret lingerie. Evolutionarily speaking, we probably wouldn't be here if it weren't for pheromones, but we really don't know too much about them. German scientists killed half-a-million silkworm moths before identifying the first pheromone in 1956. When pheromone-producing glands from a female moth were exposed to male moths, the males acted like fourteen year-old boys with subscriptions to Playboy.

Identifying pheromones and their effects on humans has been very difficult; only a handful of experiments have yielded quantifiable results. In one trial, a scientist was able to manipulate the menstrual cycles of women using only other women's sweat. (And Dubya is worried about cloning and stem cells?)

Of course, a lack of evidence hasn't stopped a multitude of companies from offering products of the instant-sexual-appeal-to-the-opposite-sex ilk. These products employ one of two pheromones (androstenone, the male component or androstenol, the female component) and neither has ever been proven to work. If they had been proven to work, I wouldn't be wasting my time writing this article and we'd all be out at the bars. Pheromones are probably the most convenient explanation because it is difficult to prove or disprove their effects. For the purposes of pursuing truth in the media I will order some pheromones and report back about my successes or failures.

I place less faith in the possibility that the Man On could be an astrologically influenced phenomenon–actually, I place no faith in that theory. Jupiter ascending in my third house has never gotten a girl in my bed. Horoscopes are worthless at predicting my Man On as well. No, it seems that I may be doomed to study this phenomenon for years to come. At the very least, I would like to be able to predict when I will have my Man On so that I can capitalize on those days by going out early and staying out late and then I can stay home and save money for the rest of the month.

FLU VS. THE COLD: HOW TO TELL THE DIFFERENCE

Influenza (or the flu) is like a cold in many ways. They are both respiratory infections caused by viruses that infect the nose, throat and lungs. No harm comes to an individual when a cold is misdiagnosed as the flu. Occasionally, a misdiagnosed cold may lead to secondary bacterial infection of the middle ear or sinus, which can easily be treated with antibiotics. However, if the flu is misdiagnosed, potentially life-threatening complications, such as pneumonia, can result.

Cold and flu-like symptoms can also be similar to other illnesses, such as strep throat, measles, and chickenpox. Which is by the way, coming into "season" in day cares! Allergies can also resemble colds since symptoms include runny nose, sneezing and a general sick feeling. Since colds and the flu are similar, it is a good idea to know some common symptoms of each and how they are transmitted to help prevent their onset. Cold viruses can be transmitted in two ways: touching respiratory secretions on another person's skin (i.e. shaking hands) or on environmental surfaces (i.e., doorknobs) and then touching your own eyes, nose or mouth, or by inhaling infectious particles in the air (i.e., respiratory secretions from someone else's cough or sneeze).

The best way to avoid a cold is to wash your hands frequently. Also try to refrain from touching your eyes, nose or mouth. Prolonged exposure to someone with a cold in a confined area should also be avoided. Sneezing or coughing into a tissue and immediately throwing the tissue away will help to prevent the spread of the virus. Cleaning counters and surfaces with virus-killing disinfectants can also be helpful.

The flu typically affects at least 20% of the US population each year. It is highly contagious and is mostly spread by direct person-to-person contact. Coughing (more than sneezing) infects most individuals since the flu virus can linger in the air for as long as three hours!! Remaining in close quarters with someone who has the flu can often lead to infection.

Symptoms usually appear within two to four days after a person has been infected and the person is considered contagious or another three to four days after the symptoms appear. Complications from the flu, which can accompany or follow the illness, generally result in a bacterial infection of the lower respiratory tract, more commonly know as pnemonia.

Though the flu and cold can have some similar symptoms, there are some very clear differences that distinguish the two illnesses.

Typical symptoms of a cold include: a slow onset, mild cough, normal or only slightly elevated temperature and symptoms that last from a few days to a week.

Typical symptoms of the flu include: a sudden onset, headache, dry cough, chest discomfort, chills, muscle aches, including back and legs, fever, extreme exhaustion and fatigue which can last from one to three weeks. There are currently no drugs that prevent colds, but zinc, when dissolved in the mouth, and vitamin C may reduce the severity and duration of a cold. However, don't take the two together, because vitamin C cancels the effects of zinc.

The flu's severity can be greatly reduced or even prevented with a flu vaccine. And don't forget to drink plenty of liquids; dry nasal passages are easy targets for infections. A well-hydrated body has a better chance of fighting colds and, of course, a healthy lifestyle that includes a balanced diet, regular exercise and plenty of sleep can help keep your immune system in tip-top shape!

DID YOU KNOW? Tooth brushes can harbor germs that cause colds, flu and gum disease? Rinse your toothbrush under hot running water for at least fifteen seconds after each use, shake off excess water and store it upright. If your bathroom has a "community" toothbrush holder, use a toothbrush cover. If you catch a cold, discard your old toothbrush. Continuing to use your old brush can extend the length of your illness and you will have to start recouping all over again.

The Colors Red, Yellow And Orange Are For Extroverts...

Film buffs may know that Italian director, Michelangelo Antonioni had a painting crew on hand at all times during the filming of his first color feature, Il deserto rosso (The Red Desert) in 1964. The painters were there to custom color every background to the director's specifications. With his first foray into color Antonioni hoped to alter the mood of his carefully composed images by changing the colors to suit the themes of the film and the states of the characters. He sought to create an emotional landscape using all the elements of the background including color.

Our reaction to color seems to go beyond mere associations (i.e. blue with sky or sea, green with grass and trees) to a response triggered in the brain by the shade and color. This can have a profound effect on the way in which we decorate our homes. By considering each room's primary use, colors can be used to shape feeling and mood.

In a broad way, hues in the red area of the color wheel are called warm, while those in the blue and green range are referred to as cool. These terms are relative rather than absolute. The warm colors such as a red and its neighboring hues are active and exciting. The cool colors, which are passive and calming, are blue, violet and green. Likewise, light colors are active, while deep colors are more likely to be passive. Armed with these basic facts we can turn to the home and begin contemplating what colors would be most appropriate in each room.

Red, yellow and orange are extroverts and inspire conversation so they would be appropriate in a living room or family room.. Red is the most energized color and just small doses are enough to boost the energy in a space. Pink, just a shade softer than red, is soothing and it promotes affability and affection. Yellow tones promote creativity and are a good choice for the home office or kitchen. (Martha Stewart is a big fan of yellow). A nice, mild orange can stimulate the appetite and conversation in the dining room.

The cool, passive colors, blue, green and purple, have pacifying and calming properties that soothe depleted spirits. These are good colors for bedrooms or anyplace in the house where you want to escape and regroup.

To create an atmosphere that is energy neutral consider browns, beige, white, and gray. These are good colors to use when you want to employ more vibrant colors or, conversely, more soothing colors. They can also work as a bridge between rooms, or to break up the clashing colors between two rooms. White is a particularly useful color as it energizes and unifies as well as enlivening other colors. It is interesting to note that beyond simply creating a mood, colors can actually effect physiological changes in the people in the room.

In an environmental study with color and light, the environment of fourteen children was altered. After a change, the children's aggressive behavior diminished and then blood pressure dropped. This suggests that color energies affect in ways that transcend seeing. One hypothesis is that neurotransmitters in the eye transmit information about light to the brain and this information releases a hormone that has numerous effects on our moods, mental clarity and energy level. In the science of Colorpsychodynamics, colors that seem to increase blood pressure, pulse and respiration rate are, in order of increasing effects, warm colors such as red, orange and yellow.

Antonioni himself, experimented before filming Il deserto rosso to find the effects of different colors so he could accurately represent characters' emotional and psychological states. He once told filmmaker Jean Luc Goddard, "The interior of the factory seen in the film was painted red; two weeks later the workers were fighting amongst one another. It was repainted in pale green and everyone was peaceful.". –John Capone

The Marriage Of Form And Function

What is sexier than a pasta pot and a pair of running shoes? A well-designed pasta pot and running shoe that is so precisely thought-out that it is actually beautiful due to the marriage of form and function. It is this idea that has made utility in modern design such a popular trend. Form and function are so intrinsically linked that objects are often deemed beautiful for their thoughtfulness and usability. Some of the grooviest new products have benefited from advancements in design and two hot companies, Nike and Alessi, have introduced some sexy and sound objects for spring.

The philosophy behind all Alessi products is to transform everyday objects into works of art. It is a true example of fusing form, function and fashion. Alessi is famous for objects such as tea kettles by Frank Gehry and pepper mills by Mark Newson.

Alberto Alessi said, "Design, real design is always highly charged with innovation toward the world of manufacturing and trade, bringing results that need no longer be justified solely on a technological or balance sheet level. A true work of design must move people, convey feelings, bring back memories, surprise, and transgress." Their mantra is "Aless is more," reinforcing their belief in minimalism and functionality.

An exquisite new product just introduced by Alessi is a pasta set designed so the colander nests beautifully into the outer pot. The object is smart. It eliminates that annoying, sometimes awkward step of straining the pasta. Picture it now, the water is boiling, the table is not yet set and your guests are arriving in fifteen minutes. This is not the time to steam your self into oblivion straining the pasta. Just the simple elimination of that one step makes you a more graceful and efficient host.

Stefano Giovannoni pasta set (Alessi, 2001)

Nike Air Visi Havoc II

The design is by Stefano Giovannoni, an Italian who has worked for Alessi in the past on dog bowls, nutcrackers, soap dishes and saucepans. Alessi calls him one of the most explosive designers of our time and that energy is transmitted to his designs.

Shoelaces are overrated aren't they? They have always been a pain, from the time you were five and learning to tie your shoes, to the innumerable times your laces have come undone when you are out for a morning jog. And when you hit the streets, you want to look good. Nike is a constant innovator in shoe technology and has designed a shoe that rids you of the burden of shoe laces. The sneakers are light-weight, almost sock-like and just fantastic looking. The Air Visi is a shoe designed for cross training and when introduced last year, it sold out immediately.

The Air Terra Humara is a street sneaker for this spring. It's laceless design is fused with light-weight phylon. The shoe slips on your foot and you are ready to go. It is one of the most inventive designs from Nike in years. Nike is expecting huge demand for this product and on their website they have limited sales to one pair per household.

This spring, design is as hot as ever. There are so many products that are smart and aimed at making your life easier whether you are entertaining at home, gardening or out hitting the trails. –Jessica Romm

POLICE BLOTTER

Kudos to the Southampton Street Crime Unit and detectives for their diligent efforts which culminated in the arrest of a thirty-year-old Patchogue man at the Speonk train station in mid-January. In the past month or so, police have received over fifty reports of thefts from parked cars and through investigating had gathered that the thief probably came by train in the early morning hours.

Early morning, January 8, the Street Crime Unit conducted a stakeout at the train station, following a suspicious man on foot to neighboring houses. Officers watched the man gain entry to multiple vehicles. They then made their move when he stopped to relieve himself on a victim's front lawn. The man was arrested and charged with two counts of trespassing, two counts of petty larceny, drinking in public and urinating in public. The thirty-year-old confessed to all the crimes and told officers that he had stolen "money and other small items" only from unlocked cars.

In Water Mill last week a Fowler Street residence was the victim of an unknown lumberjack, who tossed a log through a window and removed $1,000 worth of electronic equipment including two TVs, a VCR and a telescope. The caretaker of the home alerted police and told them it happened sometime between January 27 and 28. Police have no suspects.

Four flown flags of a figured worth of $540 were filched from far out east in Montauk (Is your lower lip sore yet?). The owner of Lakeside Inn on Edgemere Road, who normally flies flags from Columbia, Ecuador, Costa Rica and the United States, told police that a man had called a few weeks earlier and questioned the placement of Old Glory which was being flown lower than the others. The Inn owner, who always flies the Stars and Stripes in the "position of honor," told police that he thought the inquisitive caller was to blame for the thefts.

Police responded to a Pantigo Road strip mall to assist a tailgater and tailgated party whom were arguing about a traffic incident. A Springs man told police that the other man had rammed his car after an argument escalated. When witnesses gave police a different story, the tailgated party became enraged and ran out of headquarters.

Hey! Another "weird guy" sighting! An Ocean View Avenue resident told police he saw a neighbor of his walking around Saturday night "talking to himself and acting crazy." When the man woke up the next morning, he discovered that someone had vandalized his mailbox and left hand and fingerprints on it. Police are comparing the prints on the box with those of the weird guy.

A Montauk woman, residing on South Ferncroft Place, reported the not-so-grand theft of a Grand Theft Auto III game disc and Sony Playstation system from her home on January 29. She told police that her door was probably left unlocked by visiting relatives.

Finally, in East Hampton, another weird guy up to no good was reported. A man in a white Lexus was said to have driven up to a woman to ask directions. After helping him out, the woman said he asked her to be in a movie. She said no and went inside to shop, but when she returned she saw the man still waiting in his car. When she proceeded to call a friend on a payphone, the sketchy character took off.

Dan's LETTERS

WHO'S BURIED IN GRANT'S TOMB?
Dear Dan,

Your article "Curse Of The Commons" contains several gross errors.

Grant City was never a department store giant. It was the name of larger stores (over 60,000 square feet) in shopping centers, given by the parent company, W.T.Grant Company. Grants had 1,100 stores in 44 states and employed 60,000 people. Unfortunately, it filed for Chapter 11 protection in October 1975, and ceased operations in April 1976. In other words, Grants closed a full six years before you claimed it opened in Bridgehampton Commons in 1982.

Furthermore, Grants never operated a store in Bridgehampton. The closest stores were in Riverhead and East Patchogue.

Ken Corey
(Former store manager)
Somerville, N.J.

There sure was a Grant City in Bridgehampton. I shopped there. Maybe it was owned by George Steinbrenner not W.T. Grant Co.

A HOT LITTLE NUMBER
Dear Dan,

Well Dan, you did it again. I thought your story on the sand bagging defense at Mr. Rudin's oceanfront house (you were there illegally in a driving rainstorm), and the aftermath, was the best – but the little story February 1 on our beaches stands even higher.

Congratulations!

COME ONE, COME ALL TO THE BALL
Dear Dan,

In the Feb. 1 edition of your paper, I noticed the up coming Snow Ball dance on February 9 to benefit the Margaret Hand Memorial Fund. For the people who did not know Margie (she was my neice) she was killed ten years ago on February 19, 1992 in a freak accident with a horse. She was a true spirit and would have been the first on to help at something like this.

Her family is so pleased to know this fund, in her name, helps so many worthy causes. Many thanks to all the people who continue to make this possible every year.

Margie's son Bret, who is now twenty years old is in the Navy and doing fine. We are all so proud of him. If you look back at your Dan's Papers for August 9, 1991, you will find that the boat (with the torpedo) that the Navy blew up was Bret's fathers boat the Shinnecock I.

Shirley Reeve Lutz
East Quogue

Brett's father pulled a thousand fish and a live torpedo up in his net and, concerned, drove all that over to the coast guard station at Hampton Bays. Evacuations followed.

FLAG FOLLIES
Dear Dan,

The earlier article on Flag etiquette addresses flags carried in parade or displayed on single poles. The picture in Dan's Papers on 1/25 is of a nautical display, known as a "gaff rigged mast." If you use one of these, you'd better be familiar with nautical Flag etiquette or you'll have a "gaffe rigged mast". The vertical pole is the mast, the horizontal poll is the yardarm and the pole that extends outward and upward is the gaff. The "place of honor," from where the National Ensign must be displayed, is the gaff. There are also rules for what can be displayed from the masthead as well as the starboard and port spreaders. I recommend "Chapman Piloting, Seamanship & Small Boat Handling," Elbert S. Maloney, Hearst Marine Books, New York, NY, 1995 as a source for proper marine flag etiquette. (See, your paper does get around!)

Patrick F. Harrington
Fanwood, New Jersey

They should make you pass a test to get a license to fly the flag.

–D.R.

GET OFF YOUR BLOCK, BUSTER
Dear Dan,

I was just reading an article in your latest issue titled "Using the Sniffer" In the article you noted that the only local Blockbuster here in the Hamptons is in Water Mill. I was a little slighted by this comment because I live in Hampton Bays and we have a very nice Blockbuster in King Kullen Plaza on Montauk Highway. Please don't forget about your more "western" Hampton neighbors.

Love your paper!
R.D. Goldfarb
Via e-mail

I stand corrected. Apologies to Blockbuster and Hampton Bays.

Lori's World

Explore your imagination in "Lori's World". Paintings that transcend you into a world of gardens and waters filled with colors found only in your dreams. Each image invites us to dance with the flowers or swim with the fish into places unknown to the conscious mind.

Lori Crimmins, the artist and creator of "Lori's World", will be exhibiting her collection March 2-31 at The Rogers Memorial Library Gallery, 91 Coopers Farm Road,, Southampton NY
